

Doctorate in Ministry (Doctoratus in Ministerium)

Program Overview

The Doctorate in Ministry (D.Min.) at the Universidad Católica Americana (UNICA) is the most advanced professional graduate program, designed for ecclesial leaders, clergy, and pastoral agents who seek to catalyze organizational and missional transformation through rigorous applied research and ministerial scholarship. This Doctorate is positioned at the critical intersection between Advanced Practical Theology and Research Methodology. Its primary objective is to train the doctoral student to cease being a mere practitioner of ministry and to become a research-consultant capable of diagnosing, analyzing, and solving complex ministerial problems (wicked problems) through the generation of evidence-based and theologically sound interventions. The curriculum, rigorously structured over four years and 120 credits, requires 60% dedication (72 credits) to the research component. This concentration ensures the sequential articulation of training in scientific writing, immersion in high-level academic networks, production and dissemination of knowledge (publications), and an advanced ministerial internship. The culmination is the Applied Doctoral Project (Applied D.Min. Project) or Thesis, representing a significant contribution to the praxis of contemporary ecclesial leadership.

The UNICA Doctorate in Ministry trains the intellectual and practical architects of the Church's future, equipping them with the ability to lead with wisdom, competence, and profound prophetic discernment.

Justification

The justification for this Doctorate lies in the ministerial and epistemological imperative of the Church to be an ecclesia semper reformanda, capable of confronting sociological and technological disruptions with responses that are both faithful to tradition and pragmatically effective.

The crisis of faith and the deinstitutionalization of religion demand leadership that is theologically informed and empirically validated. The D.Min. is justified by the need for:

1. Critical and Applied Integration: To overcome the gap between Theology and Ministerial Praxis. The program ensures that the leader not only possesses doctrinal grounding (foundation) but also applies social scientific methods to evaluate the effectiveness of liturgies, pastoral programs, or missional strategies, making reflective practice the center of their vocation.

2. Evidence-Based Strategic Leadership: Contemporary ministry requires the management of organizational complexity, ethical crises, and significant budgets. The doctoral student develops the ability for advanced organizational diagnosis and the capacity to make high-impact decisions using data analysis and professional consulting frameworks.
3. Socialization of Knowledge for the Corpus Ecclesiae: By requiring the production and dissemination of knowledge (publications) and integration into academic networks, the program ensures that the doctoral student's research does not remain cloistered but instead nourishes and elevates the corpus of global ministerial practice, generating best practices for the universal Church. This Doctorate is, in essence, a strategic investment in the ministerial capital of the Church, ensuring leaders who are scholars in faith and experts in action.

Institutional Identity

The Universidad Católica Americana (UNICA) situates its Doctorate in Ministry within the vision of ministerial excellence and scholarship-based Diakonia.

Mission

To train ecclesial leaders holding the Doctor of Ministry degree, equipped to conduct high-level applied research, generate innovative solutions to pastoral and organizational challenges, and disseminate knowledge that strengthens the mission of the Church.

Vision

To be the benchmark graduate school in ministry, recognized for the excellence of its Doctoral Projects, leadership in applied theological research, and transformative impact on the life of faith communities.

Values

Scholarship, Service, Prophetic Leadership, Research Rigor, and Transformative Praxis.

Research Component Articulation (60% - 72 Credits)

The research component is designed as an inescapable and sequential progression, ensuring that the D.Min. is a degree in applied research of the highest caliber:

1. Sequential Seminars (42 Credits):

- DMI-702 (Problematization): Focused on identifying and justifying a complex ministerial problem.
- DMI-705 (Literature Review): Establishes the state of the art of the problem, bridging theological and social literature.
- DMI-802 (Protocol and Design): Preparation and defense of the Doctoral Protocol (Intervention Design, Methodology, Sample).
- DMI-907 (Scientific Writing): Intensive training in the style, voice, and structure required for academic publication and final drafting of the Doctoral Project.

2. Internship and Networks (4 + 6 Credits):

- DMI-903 (Advanced Ministerial Internship): Requires a research or advanced consulting residency (4 credits) in a major diocese, international NGO, or reference ministerial institution, applying the theoretical framework of the doctoral research.

- DMI-904 (Networks and Dissemination) + DMI-905 (Publications): This segment demands active participation in academic networks and, as a graduation requirement, the acceptance or publication of at least one peer-reviewed scientific article (preferably in a prestigious journal) disseminating the findings of ministerial research.
3. Applied Doctoral Project (20 Credits):
- DMI-909 and DMI-910 complete the process, dedicated exclusively to field intervention, evaluative analysis of results, and final drafting of the Doctoral Project. The project must demonstrate the application of the scientific method and the generation of a transformative and replicable solution.

Free Elective Component (16% - 19 Credits)

The Emerging Studies component promotes the doctoral student's transdisciplinary vision, enabling the exploration of critical areas for modern ministerial leadership:

- Inter/Transdisciplinary Focus: These courses (e.g., DMI-806 Behavioral Economics and Charity, DMI-803 Digital Culture) compel the doctoral student to integrate external disciplines (economics, sociology, technology) into ministerial analysis, ensuring that the ecclesial leader understands the cultural and systemic forces that impact the congregation and mission.
- Adaptability: The free elective credits are dynamic and adjusted annually to reflect cutting-edge research trends that directly affect ministry (e.g., artificial intelligence in pastoral accompaniment, neuroscience in virtue formation).
