

Master of Theology (M.Th.)

Program Overview

The Master of Theology (M.Th.) at the Universidad Católica Americana (UNICA) stands as a program of high specialization and scholarly rigor, designed to form the next generation of thinkers, academics, and ecclesial leaders capable of addressing fundamental theological questions with methodological precision and pastoral sensitivity.

In the traditio ecclesialis, theology is the scientia Dei—the pursuit of the intelligence of faith (fides quaerens intellectum). In the context of a liquid and fragmented postmodernity, there arises the urgent need to recover the systematic coherence and historical depth of Revelation. This program not only transmits the depositum fidei but also prepares the student to engage critically with philosophy, science, and contemporary cultures, updating the voice of faith for today's world.

The intensive two-year curriculum features a strong research component culminating in a Master's Thesis (Final Graduate Work). The program encourages interdisciplinarity, allowing students to explore intersections between theology and other fields such as bioethics, data science, or the sociology of religion through specialized elective courses.

UNICA's Master of Theology provides doctoral-propaedeutic training, laying the foundation for academic publication, university teaching, and high-level ecclesial consultancy. Its flexible modality accommodates the professional and ministerial lives of global intellectual leaders.

Justification

The relevance of the Master of Theology lies not merely in the archaeological preservation of the doctrinal corpus but in the epistemic urgency to rearticulate Reason within Faith for the Missio Ecclesiae in the third millennium.

The Church, immersed in an era of metaphysical fragmentation and ethical relativism, needs intellectuals of faith with the analytical sharpness to dismantle the fallacies of secularism and present Revealed Truth as the ultimate answer to humanity's deepest longing.

This program is justified by the need to:

1. Provide Propedeutic and Critical Formation: To equip priests, laypersons, and religious with the methodological tools (historical-critical, hermeneutical, and systematic) to read the world from God's perspective and God from the world's perspective—surpassing mere catechetical instruction and fostering original theological research that nourishes the intellectual life of both local and universal Church communities.
2. Develop Epistemic Leadership: To empower pastoral agents and scholars to lead ethical and bioethical reflection in the public sphere, serving as authoritative voices for Natural Law and Christian Anthropology in response to disruptive technologies and contemporary ideologies.
3. Foster Interdisciplinary Openness: To break disciplinary isolation by forming students as intellectual bridges between Theology and the Sciences—both hard and soft. The future of Theology requires informed dialogue with Cosmology, Artificial Intelligence, and Sociology to inculturate the Gospel within the new grammars of human existence.

In sum, this program is both an intellectual and pastoral imperative: to provide the Church with men and women of thought, capable of making Theology a living, relevant, and prophetic science.

Institutional Identity

The Universidad Católica Americana (UNICA) affirms its commitment to graduate research as the culmination of the dialogue between faith and reason.

Mission

To train Masters in Theology with excellence in research and systematic rigor, capable of deepening the intelligence of faith, fostering interdisciplinary dialogue, and contributing original insights to theological knowledge for the service of the Church and society.

Vision

To be recognized as the leading theological graduate school in the Americas, known for the strength of its graduates, the quality of its doctoral-propaedeutic research, and its contribution to contemporary cultural and ecclesial debates.

Methodology and Evaluation

- Mixed and Project-Based Methodology: Synchronous lectures, Socratic seminars on primary texts, individualized thesis tutoring, and short research residencies (optional) for academic exchange.
- Concentrated Research: 45% of total credits are dedicated directly to research (Methodology, Thesis Seminars, and the Final Graduate Work), ensuring deep immersion in academic inquiry.
- Graduate-Level Evaluation: Students must submit academic papers, defend research proposals (protocols), and, as a fundamental requirement, publicly present and defend their Master's Thesis, which must meet standards suitable for academic publication.

Institutional Notes and Regulatory Compliance

The university will adapt documentation and admission requirements in accordance with the laws of the State of Texas and current accreditation standards for religious institutions and virtual/hybrid graduate programs. Admission requires a bachelor's degree and an academic essay demonstrating aptitude for research.
